To help you spread the word about the campaign, we've drafted some text: one short, the other a little longer for you to use on your website, emails, and newsletters.

It's important that children learn to talk and listen, so they can communicate, make friends, have fun and learn about the world. Helping children to learn can be as easy as talking, listening and playing with them whenever you can, but sometimes it can be hard to know where to start.

Tiny Talkers supports local parents, carers and professionals by providing lots of ideas and activities for boosting children's vital speech, language and communications skills.

Search the Tiny Talkers website for simple tips and activities, or to find out what's available where you live.

Tiny Talkers supports local parents, carers and professionals to boost children's vital speech, language and communications skills by providing lots of ideas and activities such as -

- Why not try singing along with your child to everyday activities Wash, wash, wash your hands...
- Talk about what you've found on a mini adventure – ask them to describe the leaves on the floor, or the sounds they can hear.
- Play a memory game and take it turns to remember things - “what did we buy from the shop today”?
